

Photographing your location

When registering your property, the most important part of the listings are the photographs. These allow us to showcase your property in the best light. Without these photographs we won't be able to promote your location. We only accept digital photos, and these can be uploaded when registering or can be sent by WeTransfer to filming@northeastscreen.org.

These photos will be used to promote your property to production companies and convince them that a visit to your property is worthwhile. We aren't looking for works of art, but the photographs should clearly show a property's advantages and disadvantages. Try to take clear pictures from as many angles as possible. Photographs should be supplied of the property's interior and exterior, but don't take photos of anywhere that you wouldn't like filming to take place.

When taking interior photos, you may need to turn the camera vertically and, if necessary, take two or three pictures to cover the whole room. If your smartphone/camera has the function, switch to wide lens, or panorama. Stand well back to include as much of the room as possible. As well as general shots, take photos of interesting/unusual features such as spiral staircases, Edwardian fireplaces, bespoke fittings etc.

We get asked for a variety of interiors, so please include as many rooms as possible.

When taking photos of the exterior, include close ups and wide shots from as much distance as is practical. Try to give an impression of the environment surrounding the property, whether it's a street of houses, rolling fields or an industrial estate.

Photos shouldn't include people or pets, or show temporary decorations e.g. Christmas trees.

Clearly label the photos with the name of the property, which part of the property you have photographed (e.g. kitchen); the name of the photographer and the date the photo was taken.
